*AI ChatGPT amazes professors with essay-writing skills and usability

Professors, programmers and journalists could all be out of a job in just a few years, after the latest chatbot from the Elon Musk-founded OpenAI foundation stunned spectators with its writing ability, proficiency at complex tasks, and ease of use.

5 The system, called ChatGPT, is the latest evolution of the GPT family of text-generating AIs. Two years ago, the team's previous AI, GPT3, was able to generate an opinion article for the Guardian newspaper, and now the new ChatGPT has significant further capabilities.

In the days since it was released, professors have generated responses to exam questions that they say would result in top marks if they were written by a student.

10 Dan Gillmor, a professor in journalism at Arizona State University, asked the AI to carry out one of the assignments he gives his students: writing a letter to a relative giving advice about online security and privacy. The chat bot advised: "If you're unsure about the legitimacy of a website or email, you can do a quick search to see if others have reported it as being a scam."

"I would have given this a good grade," Professor Gillmor said. "Universities have some very serious issues to confront."

15 OpenAI said the new AI was created with a focus on ease of use. "The dialogue format makes it possible for ChatGPT to answer follow-up questions, admit its mistakes, challenge incorrect ideas, and reject inappropriate requests," OpenAI said in an online post announcing the release of the software.

Unlike previous AI from the company, ChatGPT has been released for anyone to use, for free, during a "feedback" period. The company hopes to use this feedback to improve the final version of the tool.

20 ChatGPT is good at self-censoring, and at realising when it is being asked an impossible question. For example, it was asked to describe what happened when Columbus arrived in America in 1492. Older models would most likely have presented an entirely fictitious account, but the new ChatGPT recognises the false information and warns that any answer would be fictional.

25 The bot is also capable of refusing to answer questions altogether. Ask it for advice on stealing a car, for example, and the bot will say that "stealing a car is a serious crime that can have severe consequences", and instead gives alternatives such as "using public transportation".
